The potential for animal abusers to go on to commit crimes against people is prompting the St. Louis, Mo., Police Department to dedicate an officer to investigate animal abuse cases full time. Officer Louis Naes, a nine-year veteran of the force, has been named the department's first animal abuse investigator and a member of the new Animal Abuse Task Force which includes the circuit attorney's office, mayor's office, the health department, and Stray Rescue of St. Louis.

"This is a pivotal moment for police understanding that these are violent crimes that need to be taken seriously," said Randy Grim, founder of Stray Rescue, which provides dog rescue and shelter operations for the city.

Officer Louis Naes is the animal abuse investigator in St. Louis Facing potential criticism for allocating scarce resources to animal cases while St. Louis is facing a 19% increase in aggravated assaults with firearms, police officials quickly justified the position as showing intolerance to all forms of violence and being a good use of resources. "Violence is violence in a community and I think all of it is related. We have 1,301 officers in the police department and we're dedicating one officer to the animal cruelty task force. I don't think that's a stretch," said Police Chief Dan Isom.

Other law enforcement officials think it pays off in terms of human — as well as animal — victims. "There is a direct relationship to animal crimes and domestic violence abusers, who think of their victims as an object," Officer Kim Lormans of the Los Angeles Police Department, which already has five animal abuse investigators, told the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. "They start with the family pet and ... use it as tool to manipulate and control. If that's not stopped and investigated, it will get higher and higher then on to the kids and spouse."

Officials also noted that some criminals arm themselves with dangerous animals, so investigating animal abuse may lead police to someone who has eluded arrest for other crimes.

Officials said that dedicating an officer solely to animal cases will help raise awareness about animal cruelty and allow the courts an opportunity to give extra attention to such cases. A billboard campaign will be launched shortly in targeted problem neighborhoods with signs reading, “Wake Up St. Louis: Abuse an animal, lose your freedom.”

The announcement was made nine days before Darick Dashon Stallworth, 31, was scheduled to be sentenced for torturing, mutilating and killing five dogs. The case – the first felony animal abuse conviction in the city in recent memory — provided impetus for more police involvement.

Grim said that Naes will be spending most of his time investigating cases in which dogs have been shot and left to die, which occur weekly, sometimes daily. “St. Louis can be a very violent city when it comes to being a dog,” he said.

“It is up to all of us to stand up for animals right here and right now,” said St. Louis Mayor Francis Slay. “We’re sending a message that we will not tolerate people who torture animals.”

Women & Animal Groups Observe Domestic Violence Awareness Month

The month of October, which is Domestic Violence Awareness Month, is seeing an increase in the number of collaborative fund- and awareness-raising events staged by community shelters for battered women and abused animals. In Cincinnati, the SPCA, YWCA and Women Helping Women will hold their 2nd Annual Bark Out Against Battering Pet Fest on Saturday, Oct. 20. National Link Coalition Steering Committee member Barbara Boat will be among a number of speakers giving presentations. The event will feature a pet costume contest, pet trick-or-treating, pet portraits, and adoptions.

Meanwhile, Saturday, Oct. 6 is National SAF-T Day, celebrating programs that shelter animals and families together. Allie Phillips reports the following women’s shelters will host dog walks in their communities: Safe and Fear-Free Environment (Dillingham, Alaska); Arising Hope (Eastlake, Colo.); Women’s Shelter of Mid-Minnesota (Brainerd, Minn.); Rose Brooks Center (Kansas City, Mo.); Domestic Violence Advocacy Center (Medford, N.J.); Families First (Whiteville, N.C.); Battered Women’s Shelter (Akron, Ohio); and Little Grass Ranch (Comfort, Texas), which will also hold pony rides. The National Resource Center on Domestic Violence is providing SAF-T dog leashes and educational materials to participating shelters.

Grants Available for Housing Pets at Women’s Shelters

Grants from $2,000 to $3,000 are available to help women’s shelters construct facilities that allow domestic violence survivors to keep their animals with them. The grants are being made available by Red Rover, working with Sheltering Animals and Families Together \(SAF-T\). Applications for the Red Rover Domestic Violence Safe Housing grants must be received by Nov. 15, according to program manager Esperanza Zúñiga. Applicants must be 501-c-3 organizations whose primary mission is sheltering victims of domestic violence. Additional information and grant application forms are available at the Red Rover website.

Animal Abuse Among Female Batterers

While the overwhelming majority of domestic violence/intimate partner violence cases are perpetrated by men, a number of incidents are caused by women who batter. Research on the likelihood of women batterers to be aggressive to non-intimate partners, children and animals has been minimal. In this study, 17% of women who battered reported having committed at least one act of animal abuse since the age of 18, compared to a prevalence rate of .28% of women in the general population. The over-representation of animal abuse among this sample was consistent with that of men arrested for domestic violence. Furthermore, women who reported committing animal abuse were found to also show moderately higher rates of committing psychological aggression and physical assault against their partners, compared to women who did not report committing animal abuse.

-- Febres, J., Shorey, R.C., Brasfield, H., Zucosky, H.C., Ninnemann, A., et al. (2012). Adulthood animal abuse among women court-referred to batterer intervention programs. Journal of Interpersonal Violence, 27(15), 3115-3126.

Adolescents' Barriers to Stopping Animal Abuse

Sociologist Arnold Arluke has written previously about how bystander apathy affects the willingness of children and adolescents to intervene when they observe animal abuse committed by strangers. In this study, Arluke explores adolescents' reluctance to intervene when the perpetrators were family members, friends or other known persons. Most interviewees claimed that although feeling disturbed by the animal abuse they did little to stop it or report it to authorities. Friendship norms and breeches presented most of them with significant barriers that either stopped or tempered their intervening.

Romanian Research Project to Examine Impact of Community Animal Abuse on Child Development

Eastern European countries, such as Romania, are marked by excessive numbers of stray and aggressive dogs roaming freely, the result of decades of political neglect of effective animal control programs. To see whether exposure to these animals has emotional effects, Malcolm Plant of the U.K.'s Teesside University is conducting a research project to identify the psychological effects of endemic community animal abuse upon children and to evaluate the efficacy of interventions.

“If natural psychological development requires a transition from egocentricity to empathic, then the postulation is that children exposed to regular abuse of animals have their psychological development inhibited and distorted and in particular their ability to be empathic. Should this be verified, it would identify serious consequences for individuals living in regions where abuse remains uncontrolled,” said Plant. The study’s objective is to prompt the European Union to address stray animal issues which have serious ramifications for the health of children. The study will also be the focus of a TV documentary.

A control study will be conducted in Berlin, Germany, where exposure to widespread abuse is said to be much less. Following analysis, programs will be initiated in Greece and Crete. National Link Coalition steering committee member Phil Tedeschi is providing support for the study.

News from the Coalitions

Two New Coalitions in Process of Forming

Two new local Link coalitions are being organized, with local advocates securing interdisciplinary interest for multi-faceted, coordinated responses to animal abuse and other forms of family violence.

In Lake Charles, La., Beth Zilbert and Shannon Cox founded The People’s Advocate of Southwest Louisiana. Since 2008 this collaborative foundation has promoted civil rights and social justice, advocated for children caught in the juvenile justice and child welfare systems, and worked to end violence against women, children and animals.

Following several successful “Campaign to End Family Violence” conferences that brought nationally-recognized Link experts to Lake Charles, the group is now undergoing a facilitated process to utilize this Link information in coordinated programs. A meeting is scheduled for November 2.

In St. Louis, Mo., Andrea Schwartz of Stray Rescue of St. Louis is seeking to connect with other individuals and agencies in the greater St. Louis area who would like to combine their efforts to end animal abuse and family violence. For details please contact Andrea at 314-771-6121 ext. 227.

Domestic dispute leads to unusual animal cruelty charge

Mother and pups were reported to be doing well.

A Longmont, Colo., woman was charged with animal cruelty after she reportedly stuffed a days-old Chihuahua puppy in her pants. Police cited Johna Turner, 39, when they responded to a domestic dispute call and found her allegedly intoxicated and arguing with a man in the apartment. She offered to leave and return when she sobered up to retrieve her dog and its three puppies. However, a witness told police Turner had allegedly stuffed one of the puppies down her pants. An officer ordered her to remove the dog, so she shook her leg and the puppy fell out of her right pants leg onto the floor. She then threw the dog into a stroller where the other puppies were resting. The man reportedly took the dogs to the Longmont Humane Society claiming he could not care for them. The dogs were all said to be in good shape and Turner's case is expected to come to court on Oct. 18.

Vet Reports Bestiality; Defendant to Plead Guilty

A Vancouver, B.C., man accused of having sex with his Rottweiler is expected to enter a guilty plea to bestiality charges after a veterinarian reported the case out of concern for the animal's welfare. It was not immediately clear why Brian Anthony Cutteridge, 37, who has been a vocal opponent of laws that condemn sex between humans and animals, decided to enter the guilty plea, although news media reported that an incriminating video may have been involved.

Brian Cutteridge and canine friend

In online writings, Cutteridge has actively opposed laws against zoophilia as being logically incoherent and inherently unjust, claiming that it doesn't cause harm to animals. The B.C. SPCA expressed pleasure with the court's decision, feeling strongly that bestiality does cause distress to animals victimized by the crime.

Cutteridge was scheduled to plead guilty to one charge of bestiality and be sentenced on Oct. 2 on what would have been the first day of a scheduled two-week trial.

Suicidal/homicidal father tortures cat to keep from killing himself

Brandon Krahenbuhl

A Blue Springs, Mo., man was charged with felony animal abuse after police said he told them he tortured and killed a cat, while recording the event on his cellphone, so he wouldn't kill himself. Court records revealed that Brandon Scott Krahenbuhl, 23, also claimed to be both suicidal and homicidal. Police responding to a call regarding a possible suicide heard Krahenbuhl make suicidal statements before admitting the incident. A detective examining the cellphone video reported seeing a small cat being hanged from a noose. After the cat escaped, Krahenbuhl allegedly caught it, slammed it into a wall twice with such strength that it caused dents in the Sheetrock, then stomped the cat to death. Officers also found Krahenbuhl's three-month-old daughter in the apartment. He was being held on $50,000 bond.

Physician commits suicide after being charged with animal cruelty

Dr. Isaias Lerner Biber

A doctor in the Miami, Fla., area killed himself on Sept. 5, two days after police charged him with felony animal cruelty for killing a beagle by clubbing the dog with a hammer and stabbing it with a screwdriver. Dr. Isaias Lerner Biber, 65, told police he was fed up with the dog's misbehavior. Witnesses said they saw the doctor repeatedly hit the dog, which was tied to a tree outside the doctor's home, on the head with a hammer and then impale the dog with a screwdriver near the dog's throat and ear. The suicide culminated an apparent series of tragic events in the doctor's life, including his mother suffering a mini-stroke and his being sued for medical malpractice. An attorney specializing in medical licensure cases told the South Florida Sun-Sentinel that while a state board may have argued that acts of cruelty hindered the doctor's ability to practice medicine and therefore merited discipline, the doctor could have argued that the animal cruelty case did not pertain to his duties since there is nothing about animals in the Hippocratic Oath.

Adult Abuse Case Linked to Child and Animal Abuse

A caregiver caught on tape allegedly abusing repeatedly a non-verbal man with severe autism has had brushes with the criminal justice system in the past that involved both child and animal abuse.

Michael Garritson, 61 was one of two caregivers seen allegedly abusing Jamie Oakley, 23, hundreds of times while he was under their care, according to the San Diego Sheriff's Department. Oakley's parents, concerned about their son's welfare, installed a surveillance camera in Jamie's room. The footage reportedly shows Oakley being slapped, kicked and punched. Garritson has pleaded not guilty and a judge set bail at $1 million.

After running a records search, San Diego's NBC 7 found that Garritson was tried for second-degree murder back in the in 1980s in connection with the death of a 13-month-old boy who was under his care. A jury deadlocked 11 – 1 and a mistrial was declared.

In 2002, more than 150 dogs were taken from Garritson's home in Valley Center where they were living in filthy conditions, being bred and sold online and at pet stores. Garritson pleaded guilty to felony animal neglect and received three years' probation.

Couple in Animal Hoarding Case Charged with Child Abuse

A Fayette County, Tenn., couple charged with hoarding 168 animals and 25 dead birds in a home that investigators described as a "house of horrors" appeared in court for what they thought was a child custody hearing only to find themselves charged with aggravated child abuse for subjecting the two teenagers to a house filled with animal feces, urine, debris, and trash. William and Rocio Parr had $110,000 bonds placed on each of them and the home-schooled children were placed in DCS custody. The charges came after Collierville police received a tip about deplorable conditions in the home, where the dogs, cats, rodents, and dead birds were removed in a Sept. 14 raid. "It's one of the most horrific scenes that any of us had been on," said veterinarian Dr. Jennifer Dunlap. WAFF-TV reported the couple had been cited in 2004 in another animal hoarding case.

William & Rocio Parr

“Career Criminal” Charged with Animal Cruelty

A man whom the New York Daily News called a “career criminal” was charged with animal cruelty for allegedly kicking a small dog viciously and repeatedly in a Harlem apartment house elevator. The incident was captured on surveillance video. Brian Freeman, 28, was taken into custody while appearing in a Manhattan Criminal Court proceeding for a marijuana possession charge when detectives recognized him from the video. Freeman is said to have a lengthy criminal record dating back to 2000 that includes arrests for assault, robbery and drug possession. Police do not know the relationship of the dog to Freeman or its whereabouts.

Police distributed pictures to catch the alleged perpetrator.

ABOUT THE NATIONAL LINK COALITION

The National Link Coalition is an informal, multi-disciplinary collaborative network of individuals and organizations in human services and animal welfare who address the intersections between animal abuse, domestic violence, child maltreatment and elder abuse through research, public policy, programming and community awareness. We believe that human and animal well-being are inextricably intertwined and that the prevention of family and community violence can best be achieved through partnerships representing multi-species perspectives.

OUR VISION: The Link between violence against humans and violence against animals is widely known and understood. We believe that through the recognition and integration of this understanding into policies and practices nationwide, humans and animals will be measurably safer.
