Kentucky Considers Pet Protection Orders

The Commonwealth of Kentucky is the latest state to consider legislative action that would allow courts to include pets in emergency or permanent protection-from-abuse orders in cases of domestic violence. House Bill 216 was introduced on Feb. 3 by Rep. Joni Jenkins and is currently in the House Judiciary Committee.

The law, if enacted, would allow courts that determine that a petitioner’s allegations indicate the presence of an immediate and present danger of domestic violence and abuse to issue a protection order that directs the care, custody or control of any animal owned, possessed, leased, kept or held as a pet by either party or by a child residing in the home. Livestock, which are included in PPO laws in some states, would not be covered under the proposed Kentucky legislation.

A similar bill was introduced in Kentucky in 2013 but failed. Currently, 28 states plus Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia have enacted statutes extending domestic violence protection orders to family animals.

Video Describes British Pet Fostering Program

The United Kingdom’s Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has produced a 9-minute video describing its pioneering PetRetreat program which has cared for more than 1,200 animals belonging to 800 families since 2002. The video features survivors, RSPCA inspectors and directors, and pet fosterers providing first-hand accounts of their work. The service provides a retreat for pets whose human family members are going into domestic violence refuges until they have a safe place where they can live and be reunited with their animals. The PetRetreat program has also produced several guidebooks for survivors. The video and booklets are available at the RSPCA PetRetreat website.
THE LINK AND... CRIMINAL JUSTICE

Teen Girls Charged in Animal Cruelty, Sex Abuse Cases Draw Link Response

The potential for juvenile animal cruelty offenders to escalate into interpersonal violence in adulthood was the focus of a response to a dramatic incident in Orange Park, Fla. in which two teenage girls allegedly abused and killed a threatened species of gopher tortoise last July and boasted about it in a video they posted online.

WJXT-TV reported that the girls posted a cellphone video on Facebook of the tortoise being lit on fire, thrown on the concrete and being stomped on until it died. The girls were heard laughing and saying "Let's light his head on fire," “Burn baby, burn baby,” and “Ugh, I just want him to die.”

Lynn Wadelton, a local mental health expert, told the station that incidents like these among teenagers demonstrate a lack of empathy and conduct disorder, often stemming from adverse childhood experiences.

The Clay County Humane Society issued a statement: “Animal abuse is a key indicator of future violence towards human beings. These acts of cruelty typically escalate to future abuse of animals and people. It is vital that anyone who learns of violence towards animals contact the police immediately. We commend the young people who saw this animal abuse online and alerted the Clay County Sheriff's Office to help prevent future crimes like this one.”

The investigation led authorities to charge the older girl, Jennifer Emoke Greene, 18, and her unnamed 15-year-old friend with animal cruelty and killing a threatened species. The investigation also led authorities to charge Greene with lewd and lascivious battery for a game of hide-and-seek that turned into a sexual encounter with a boy, the Florida Times-Union reported. The younger girl’s case was being handled in juvenile court.

Japanese Animal Abuse Hotline Reports Figures

Growing awareness of how animal abuse often serves as an indicator and predictor of crimes against humans prompted the Hyogo Prefectural Police in Japan to inaugurate a telephone hotline in January, 2014, where the public could report suspected animal abuse (See LINK-Letter, March 2014). The department recently compiled statistics from its first full year of operation. There were 194 calls to the hotline in 2014, including 57 calls from outside the prefecture, which is the area around Kobe. The department reported one particular case in which two minors who shot cats with airguns were taken into custody.

BUILDING AWARENESS ABOUT THE LINK

New Pet Magazine Debuts, to Feature Link Articles
A new monthly pet-themed digital magazine and website are helping to build awareness of animal abuse's links with human violence in the area around Myrtle Beach, S. Car. Elizabeth Harris launched Grand Strand Pet Magazine on Marc h 1 to complement her website, promoted as the ultimate guide for animals in Horry and Georgetown Counties. Regular news features from the National Link Coalition and other sources will help educate the public about animal cruelty.

Domestic Violence Coalition Educating About The Link
The National Coalition Against Domestic Violence, which recently debuted domesticshelters.org, an entire website dedicated to helping survivors find safehoming for their pets, has undertaken an awareness campaign to alert the field to the animal abuse-domestic violence Link. A weekly e-mail blast to NCADV's members on Feb. 4 addressed “Safety Planning for Pets” with an extensive article called “No Four-Legged Family Member Left Behind” that appeared on the home page of the domesticshelters.org website (See LINK-Letter, September 2014).

The article cited statistics and how animal abuse is part of the “power-and-control wheel” of dynamics that batterers use to intimidate their victims. The article encouraged domestic violence survivors to include pets in their safety plans and guided them to find pet-friendly domestic violence shelters.

Visual Representations of The Link
The concepts behind The Link are intuitively simple, but trying to put them into words can be devilishly difficult. In addition to our standard Venn diagram showing how the four types of family violence are intertwined, we have also come up with some other ways to help visualize The Link. Over the next few months we’ll share these with you to help you better present this topic to your colleagues.

This month we look at The Link as part of the intergenerational cycle of violence impacting children in homes marked by domestic violence.
ANIMAL ABUSE AND... HUMAN HEALTH

Cross-Training Opportunities in Human Medicine

The “One Health” movement has been growing over the past few years to help bridge the gaps between veterinary and human medicine. One Health programs are expanding the usual interdisciplinary focus on such issues as zoonotic diseases, epidemiology and comparative anatomy to look at issues affecting the human-animal bond, including the prevention of animal abuse and human violence.

One potential opportunity for furthering professional awareness in this area may lie in various states’ requirements for Continuing Medical Education. For example, Connecticut requires physicians to take two classes on sexual assault and domestic violence in order to renew their licenses, and the National Link Coalition has presented training on animal abuse as a domestic violence indicator and predictor to meet this requirement.

Kentucky and Florida also require CME training on domestic violence. Iowa requires CME on child abuse. Iowa requires CME on identifying and reporting suspected child and dependent adult abuse. Remarkably, 45 states do not yet require a class on interpersonal violence.

Similarly, CE requirements for nurses may present opportunities to sensitize and train professionals about the Link. Of the 12 states that require CE courses for nursing licensure renewal, only four include interpersonal violence: Florida (domestic violence), Kentucky (pediatric abusive head trauma), New York (child abuse and maltreatment), and Texas (elder abuse and sexual assault). Eight jurisdictions (Delaware, Michigan, Nevada, New Jersey, Ohio, Oregon, West Virginia, and Puerto Rico) require CEs for nursing licensure renewals but do not mention interpersonal violence.

Training on interspecies violence as it impacts interpersonal violence would seem to be an opportunity for engaging the medical community in The Link.

NEWS FROM LOCAL LINK COALITIONS

Link Coalition Launched in Columbia, Mo.
The latest community Link coalition to organize is the Animal Welfare Law Enforcement Committee in Boone County, Mo. The group was initiated by Boone County Prosecuting Attorney Daniel K. Knight, who tells The LINK-Letter that the coalition is meeting monthly. For more information as to how your multidisciplinary group can form and work together for an integrated approach to preventing various forms of family and community violence, visit the National Link Coalition’s Toolkit and list of community Link coalitions.

Ottawa’s Link Coalition Reports Progress
SafePet Ottawa, our Link coalition in Canada’s capital, reports that its members have made considerable progress and its activities are continuing with great enthusiasm. The organization is a group of eight veterinary clinics, 27 foster families, behaviorists, retailers, and community members who provide short- and long-term fostering for companion animals of women and children who need to exit from domestic violence into local Violence Against Women shelters.

A new website has been designed that offers immediate steps to help women in crisis who need assistance with their animals. Its resource section includes handy tips on pet healthcare and links to local organizations and several Link organizations, including the National Link Coalition.

The group believes strongly in the power of networking. Requests at a local synagogue for people to foster pets led to an opportunity to present to the Ottawa Coalition to End Violence Against Women’s Justice Committee, which in turn led to the Ottawa Police’s Partner Assault Unit. Semi-annual “Best Practices” sessions are bringing together law enforcement, the legal profession, women’s shelters and animal behaviorists to exchange ideas and for orientation, updates and feedback.

“Coalitions work well for us,” the group reports. “Participants each contribute to the flow of information within our group and then move that information out through their own networks.”

Student Develops Statistical Model to Identify Non-Accidental Injury

Cummings Veterinary Medicine magazine at the Tufts University College of Veterinary Medicine featured Nida Intarapanich, a third-year student who developed a statistical modeling tool that looks at injury patterns to help veterinarians distinguish between accidental and intentional injuries. The model is said to identify car-strike victims with 92% accuracy and abuse victims with 81% accuracy, based on different injury patterns. The article described indicators of animal cruelty and called abused animals a “canary in a coal mine that brings to light a whole broken and hurt family.” The National Link Coalition’s Phil Arkow was interviewed for the feature. The cruelty cases came from the ASPCA Bergh Hospital, and the vehicular trauma cases were from Tufts’ Foster Hospital for Small Animals. The ASPCA’s Randy Lockwood, Rob Reisman and Rachel Touroo are research advisors.

Animal Abuse, Bullying, Victimization and Behavioral Difficulties Linked

To examine the relationship between behavioral difficulties, animal abuse, and bullying among women, 500 female undergraduate students completed surveys assessing animal abuse experiences, bullying behaviors, and victimization of bullying during their K-12 school years, and evaluated their behavioral difficulties. Results revealed a significant relationship between animal abuse, bullying, and victimization experiences. Moreover, animal abusers displayed significantly more behavioral problems compared to non-abusers. Animal abuse, bullying and victimization were significant predictors of various behavioral issues. Results suggest that behavioral difficulties associated with female animal abusers are similar to those related to male perpetrators.

Equine-Assisted Therapy Can Help Survivors of Domestic Violence

Anecdotal accounts support the effectiveness of equine-facilitated psychotherapy (EFP) with women who have experienced abuse, but there is a lack of supporting research. This qualitative study examined the stories and effectiveness of EFP for 5 women who had experienced abuse. Data analysis identified four patterns in the participants’ stories: I Can Have Power; Doing It Hands On, Horses as Co-Therapists, and Turned My Life Around. Overall, EFP was found to be an effective intervention for women who have experienced abuse.

Female survivors of domestic violence may experience symptoms of low self-esteem, insecurity, difficulty with problem solving, low self-efficacy, and high anxiety with regard to their economic future. Creative methods are needed to help abuse survivors overcome these factors so they are able to set and attain career goals. This article discusses an overview of the literature regarding career-related consequences for female survivors of intimate partner abuse, describes equine assisted therapy, and details a creative career counseling method.

Bills We’re Watching:

Domestic Violence/Pet Protection Orders

H.R. 1258 – the Pets And Women’s Safety (PAWS) Act – was re-introduced with a new number and 48 co-sponsors (12 Republican, 36 Democrat). The bill would expand existing federal domestic violence protections to include pets of domestic violence victims. It would prohibit crossing state lines to harm a domestic partner’s pet, and establish a federal grant program to provide assistance and housing to victims’ pets in need of emergency shelter. Supporters are seeking a few more Republican co-sponsors to help keep sponsorship bipartisan.

Kentucky HB 216 would allow courts to issue a protection order that directs the care, custody or control of any pet by either party or by a child residing in the home. The bill is in the House Judiciary Committee.

Michigan SB 28 would make it a crime to knowingly kill, torture, mutilate, maim, disfigure, or poison an animal, or threaten to do so, with the intent of causing mental suffering or distress to a person or to exert control over a person. The bill passed the Judiciary Committee and is in the Committee of the Whole.

New Jersey A 494 would provide specific statutory authority to allow courts to include animals in domestic violence restraining orders. The bill affects animals belonging to either party or a minor child in the household. The bill is in the Assembly Women & Children Committee.

Cross Reporting

New York A5082 would require anyone mandated to report suspected child abuse who also encounters suspected animal abuse in the course of their duties to make an immediate report to local police or SPCA agencies. Failure to report would be a Class A misdemeanor and civilly liable. An extensive list of medical, social work, therapy, education, camp, day care, counseling and law enforcement professionals are mandated reporters of child abuse. The bill is in the Social Services Committee.

SB 1265 is in the Senate Judiciary, Natural Resources and Rules Committees.

New York A1265 would create the crime of companion animal hoarding. The bill is in the Assembly Agriculture Committee.

Alleged Animal Abuser Held as Suspect in Homicide

Two Jackson County, Ore. residents – one of whom is facing court action on charges of animal neglect – were arrested in Northern California in conjunction with the murder of a North Carolina motel manager and the theft of his car. The Medford Mail Tribune reported that Samantha Lynn Shilts, 21, and Tyler Mark Pierce, 21, were awaiting extradition back to North Carolina. The hotel manager, Jakir Mohammed Sheikh, 58, was found strangled in a room the couple had rented. While Pierce has no previous criminal history in Oregon, Shilts has an open court case from July, 2014 charges of second-degree misdemeanor animal neglect.

Police Seek Convicted Dog Burner in Motor Vehicle Death of Child

Police in Montgomery, Ala., spent Valentine’s Day weekend putting out an alert for Juan Daniels, 28, charged with homicide after he fled the scene where he allegedly drove his SUV into an apartment complex and ran over a child. Daniels, who was considered armed and dangerous, had been released from prison in 2013 after serving four years of a nine-year prison sentence for beating a dog with a shovel, dousing it with lighter fluid and setting it on fire. The dog survived but with severe burns.

Police told WSFA-TV that Daniels was allegedly trying to hit a man with whom he had been arguing but instead ran over Aiden Howard, 6, who died 10 days later of severe injuries. Scott Hill, Daniels’ arresting officer from the 2007 cruelty case, questioned why the convicted felon had been released from prison. “There’s studies out there that show the link between animal abuse, child abuse, elderly abuse, domestic violence, so it’s definitely there,” Hill said.

Arrest Made in Triple Homicide/Dogfighting Case

A triple homicide in Holbrook, Idaho, on April 4, 2013, believed to be linked to a dog-fighting ring (See LINK-Letter May 2013) led to the arrest on Jan. 30 of Severo Luera, 35, on felony charges stemming from the three murders. Police said the investigation was ongoing, according to the Salt Lake City Desert News. Luera was already being held in Utah on misdemeanor drug charges and was awaiting extradition to Idaho. Luera reportedly had prior convictions including possession of a dangerous dog, drug possession and distribution, and supplying alcohol to minors. Oneida County sheriff’s deputies investigating the 2013 murders found 63 pit bulls and 38 marijuana plants on the remote property.
